group(s) contained within your molecule. You will not need to run all of the chemical tests on each sample. Your job is to decide which are needed for each unknown in order to determine its functional group(s). If you are not thoughtful in this process, and try to run all of the tests, you will likely run out of material (see below).

the same MP, the unknown can be mixed with one of the known compounds and a MP taken of the mixture. If the MP range is lowered and widened, it means that the two are different compounds. If the MP stays the same it means that the two compounds are likely identical. This technique is known as a mixed melting point determination.
